

COURSE OVERVIEW

Business Work-Out is a structured improvement process which enables employees to directly improve the operational processes they administer and manage. The underlying principle of Work-Out is that those closest to problems are the most suitable to resolve and fix them. The objective of the activity is to take unnecessary work out of a system, hence the name! It enables employees and operatives to find a better way of satisfying customers (both internal and external) by working in a collaborative way, usually cross functionally, to solve real business problems.

Work-Outs are delivered as business improvement activities or events, normally lasting 1 to 5 days, after which the improvement strategy is either implemented or discontinued. At the work-out event a small team of employees work on specific business issues that are defined by a sponsor and the event is managed by a Work-Out facilitator (see BIS109). Opportunities for improvement are defined as those that can be fully implemented within 90 days and normally do not require any IT change. Anything that is more complex is excluded at the scoping stage. Work-outs are split into three stages; the build-up, where participants are identified and the opportunity scoped; the work-out event, where the root cause of problems or opportunities are explored for solutions; and the implementation, where whatever solution that is agreed upon is implemented.
